Assassins to be executed

OSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A court Tuesday sentenced two Palestinians to hang for the assassination of an Egyptian editor that led to a bloody battle between Cypriot troops and Egyptian forces.

A three-judge tribunal convicted Samir Khatib, 28, and Zayed Hussein al-Ali, 26, of premeditated murder and, over their protestations of innocence, set their execution for June 1.

Millionaire testifies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millionaire rice dealer in Park told House investigators Tuesday that the implications of a report found in his home, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill never intended to use for campaign contributions.

He also repeated assertions that while he gave tens of thousands of dollars in campaign contributions on request, he never did so as an agent of the Iranian government. He said he never tried to contribute to "twist arms" or buy influence.

Strikers may return to work

WASHINGTON (AP) — Striking mine construction workers ratified a new contract Tuesday, and officials said most would return to their jobs today, ending a 120-day walkout.

Church, vice president of the United Mine Workers, said that with 35 out of 51 construction workers returning to work, the vote was 2,306, or 64 percent, for the new contract, or 1,278, or 36 percent, against the old contract.

Polygamist's body found

LAKE CITY (AP) — A body found in a grave near Wellington, has been identified as polygamist Robert Hunt Simons, 48, who was missing since April 23, 1975, said Carbon County Attorney Ronald Boutwell.

Simons, leader of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was married to two wives, Edna and Thelma. He and his wife, Thelma, have been charged in Simons' death, he said.

Navajos meet oil officials

TEZUMA CREEK, Utah (AP) — Navajo officials and oil company executives met Tuesday to see if they can end a sit-in by about 100 Navajos that has shut down private oil drilling in this part of the Navajo Reservation for six days.

Protesters have gripped with four oil companies and the Navajo Nation, and with the Navajo tribal leadership.

They say the oil companies are guilty of discrimination in hiring and carelessness about the land and environment.

Pro Master Plan completed

U of Provo City Master Plan, which outlines the city's development through 1990, has been approved by the Provo Planning and Zoning Department.

Some of the plan have been sent to the BYU and Utah State Libraries and the neighborhood chairmen of text and maps can be purchased for $5, said Jerry Howell, director of planning and zoning department.

The price is not right

PROVO (AP) — Criminal charges against a man who allegedly identified himself to merchants as music singer Ray Price and passed a bad check for $4,000, were dismissed Tuesday.

County Attorney Noel Woodson said he dismissed the bad check charge, a felony, against Erwin C. 46, Manti, on a recommendation that he be committed to the Utah State Hospital.

Baseball great to speak

Hall-of-Famer Harmon Killebrew and Idaho Legislator Ralph Harding will speak in a Ballroom, ELWC, Thursday at 12 noon.

Killebrew, a native of Payette, Idaho, played major league baseball for 18 years, 10 of which he spent with the Minnesota Twins. He was selected in 1959 Major League All-Star games and is the American League MVP.

Harding, a BYU graduate in Political Science, is in Malad City, Idaho, and is a former member of the Idaho State Legislature.

Progress lures faculty member

University faculty member will announce his candidacy for the United States Congress today.

Richardson, associate professor of Communications, said he will formally announce his candidacy at 9 a.m. at the Provo Roadway Inn, University Ave.

He asked what prompted him to run for office, he said, "I have spent 20 years putting off these teaching good politicians to go to town to straighten out the mess but they're around to it. As a taxpayer I'm just tired of tipped off."

Richardson, a Republican, will challenge incumbent McKay for the congressional seat in first district.

Carter may reject controversial bomb

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter has tentatively decided against production of the neutron bomb, the controversial nuclear weapon designed to defeat a massive Soviet tank attack on Western Europe.

Carter was conferring Tuesday with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who arrived earlier in the day to press his government's support for production of neutron weapons.

"All these questions are subject to consultation within the alliance," Genscher told reporters after a private meeting with Vance.

When asked directly whether Carter had made up his mind, Vance said the president "has not decided that question."

It was understood, however, that Carter's tentative decision was related to Bonn late last week through Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher. Genscher's visit was hurriedly arranged in a final effort by the West Germans to persuade Carter to modify his decision.

State Department officials said privately that Carter probably would make a final decision after his meeting with Genscher but that it would not be announced for several days.

The neutron warhead has a relatively small explosive force, confined to a radius of 200 to 300 yards, but yields twice the radiation of a regular nuclear weapon. Defense strategists consider it an effective weapon against an invading tank force in a European war.

Reeder wraps up ASBYU programs

Fulfilling a platform promise of increasing student awareness of ASBYU activities, Martin Reeder, ASBYU president, delivered his State of the Studentbody Address Tuesday.

The majority of the address was composed of summary reports submitted by each office concerning individual programs and achievements.

"We wish to stand accountable to the students at this time," Reeder said. "Although many students feel that the student government is against them, this is not the case. Student government is the students' organization."

To introduce Reeder, ASBYU President-elect Perry Bratt said 610 students were actively involved in student government during the winter semester and they didn't think it was a joke. "There is a place for student government and they have accomplished things this year to be of service."

Another platform promise was the creation of an Honor Council that would encourage and promote BYU and its standards. Vice President Randy Holmgren chairs the 13-member council that is currently sponsoring a "One in a Million Week," which is focusing on the individual and his unique experiences.

According to the summary reports submitted by the offices, participation in many programs has increased over the year. The Social Office reported a total participation in sponsored activities of 122,390

Matheson calls special session

Gov. Scott Matheson called a special legislature session May 24-27, he announced Tuesday.

The three-day agenda includes some proposed changes in the State Constitution, but the legislators may also have the chance to re-enact the state budget and several other bills which were apparently passed incorrectly by the House of Representatives.

Matheson said he wanted the lawmakers to report by May 1 the discovery of procedural errors in bills handled by the House of Representatives during the January budget session.

A judge has struck down one bill, and four others were ruled invalid by the Legislative General Council's Offices because constitutional rules were not followed.

According to the ruling, clerks did not read the full title of bills when they were brought up for voting, measures were placed on the wrong reading calendar and the clerical staff failed to provide print-outs of the final votes.

"Neither the legislative branch, the executive branch, nor the Utah taxpayers themselves can afford to let this matter go by without some definitive answers on why this occurred so that it will not happen again," Matheson said.

The official agenda now includes some proposed amendments to the state constitution. These would change the length of legislative sessions, permit lawmakers to call themselves back into session to override vetoes and require the governor and lieutenant governor to run on the same political ticket.

The four bills ruled invalid by the Legislative General Council's Office were the bill raising the state's gasoline tax by two cents per gallon, a governmental immunity law, the 55 mph speed limit and an appropriation for the purchase of the Devereaux mansion.

Legislative lawyers have been reviewing other bills because of minor technical errors, including the general appropriation act and the state school finance act, which together form the state budget. A supplemental appropriations bill which will fund many parks and recreation projects is also being questioned.

Matheson has scheduled the special session to run for three days, but legislators could legally stay for 30 days, Senate President Moroni Jensen, D-Salt Lake, said he thought the session might last through May 27.

"It may have to," said Matheson's press secretary Margaret Wilde, "in view of the number of bills that may have to be re-passed."

Oologist story wins tipper dinner for two

A reader who informed the Daily Universe about the death of oologist J. Donald Daynes is the winner of the News Tip of the Week.

The call enabled the Universe — which had already written and was getting ready to publish a story about Daynes' collection of bird eggs in the museum — to include a complete obituary in last week's Heritage Edition. The story told readers attending the Bean Museum dedication about Daynes' death just the day before.

The reader and his partner will be guests of the Universe at dinner in a local restaurant.

Runners up included a caller who tipped the Universe about Donny and Marge Osmond taping public service programs at KBVU; Neil Young, who called about fire inspections at the Bean Museum which resulted in a front page feature photo; and Steve Bond, who called about the 101st Branch's unusual Easter egg hunt that ended in a "bomb scare."

Readers are encouraged to call the Daily Universe if they know about something that might develop into a news story, feature or news photograph. Call in tips to 374-1211, the Universe's hotline; ext. 3630. All other calls should be made on ext. 2957.

Committee proposes Social Security tax cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Budget Committee is considering a $7.5-billion rollback in Social Security taxes accompanied by a $5-billion reduction in President Carter's proposed general tax cut.

Rep. Robert N. Giaimo, D-Conn., the committee's chairman, wants Congress to soften the blow of the $227-billion, 10-year Social Security payroll tax increase it approved last year.

It would do so by slicing the scheduled tax increase by $7.5 billion in 1978. However, Giaimo's proposal also would trim the Carter administration's overall reduction in taxes by $5 billion, substituting a $20 billion general tax cut for Carter's 25 billion proposal.

Giaimo's proposal could mean savings next year as much as $292 in taxes paid by workers whose incomes are subjected to the maximum Social Security payroll tax.

At lower income levels, the savings would be more modest — $25 to $37.50, for those earnings between $10,000 and $15,000.

Under existing law Social Security taxes are to be levied on the first $22,900 of an employee's earnings next year. Giaimo would reduce this figure to $18,900. Thus, the biggest savings would occur for those earning that amount or more, and for their employers who pay matching taxes.

Meanwhile, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said that a suggestion to use revenues from the proposed crude oil tax to offset Social Security tax increases was "a pretty good idea." The proposal was suggested Sunday by Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore.

O'Neill said he had talked to Carter about the problems of finding funds for the retirement system but was not at liberty to divulge the conversation or to say whether the oil tax concept was something Carter was interested in.

Giaimo presented his plan as part of an overall tax and spending program that rivals the one submitted by Carter in January.

The president recommended leaving the Social Security tax increases as they are. But he also proposed cutting income and other taxes by $25 billion in an effort to inject new life into the economy while offsetting Social Security tax increases.

The Giaimo proposal is scheduled to be presented Wednesday to the House Democratic Caucus, which is trying to establish a party position on revising the Social Security revenue bill.

More funds for CUP sought by Matheson

WASHINGTON (AP) — Utah Gov. Scott Matheson Tuesday asked the Senate budget panel to add another $15 million to the $37 million President Carter has already recommended for construction of the Central Utah Project (CUP).

In addition to the $52.6 million total, Matheson also asked a Senate public works subcommittee to fund the units of the CUP which will help the Ute Indian Tribe.

The project is essential to the continued growth of Utah's urban centers, along the Wasatch Front, Matheson said. The CUP has been analyzed and reviewed for several years and "these continued confrontations have resulted in unnecessary delays, increased costs and further rationing of water," he said.

"This cannot continue," Matheson continued. "It is now time to move forward with a realistic, reasonable and economical funding program for each of the project units."

"All the necessary steps have been done. We are ready to throw dirt."

Starting construction on the Upalco and Uintah Units of the CUP is essential to satisfy longstanding commitments that have been made to the Ute Indian Tribe, he said. "I would like to make a special appeal that funds be included in your bill to permit the construction."

Futurist speaks out against poor economic management

By MICHAEL J. ROUCHE
Universe Staff Writer

From 1948 to 1973 Americans did the best they could to wreck their country and failed, Dr. Herman Kahn, founder of the Hudson Institute said at Tuesday's forum.

Bad economic management during those years was not enough to destroy the country because the U.S. was going through a period of unprecedented economic growth, Kahn said. But, he warned, poor management cannot continue into the future without destroying the country.

America entered an economic "bad period" in 1965 that Kahn described as a period when "you're not sick, but you're not well." During this period, which he predicted will last until the early part of the next century, America cannot experience the same bad management it has experienced since 1948 or it may be destroyed.

"The country is becoming rapidly inoperable because of environmental, safety, ecological and other regulations," Kahn said.

One of the major problems, Kahn said, is "the country is too rich, too powerful, too well off. It almost refuses to work on its problems."

He blamed part of the problem on an "anti-growth triad" that has developed in the U.S.

The triad is composed of three separate groups that to a varying degree affect growth in America.

The first group, as Kahn described it, is a "new class" composed of intellectuals who "make up their minds on second hand information." Because they use second hand information to form their opinions and governmental policy, Kahn said, they are "removed from society."

He said the members of the new class are mostly upper middle class and make a living using language, academic and analytical skills.

The new class, along with the other two divisions of the triad, "is maniacally hostile toward growth," Kahn said. He also said an anti-growth feeling is present throughout the world's upper middle class.

Kahn divided the new class into five subdivisions: traditional conservative, neo-conservative, traditional liberal,

All members of the new class are trying to save something, Kahn said. He cited as an example the neo-liberals appointing themselves as representatives of the caribou and the tundra when the Alaskan pipeline was built.

In the question/answer period after the forum, Kahn said the emphasis of the new class is on such things as welfare, social justice egalitarianism, social control and overall planning.

Kahn said the media has also lost contact with the people. He said the media influences the decision makers but not the worker.

The other two groups in the triad are the "radical or reformed rich" and the "leisure class," he said.

The radical rich will not play an important part in the future of the country, he added.

The leisure class, which has inherited its wealth, Kahn said, has to have a self image of "higher values than the rest of us." He added they also are "separated from reality." He said the leisure class uses its influence to force its values on the rest of America.

Students erring in gospel, say visiting evangelists

Religious fundamentalists claim students need to learn the word of the Lord as he taught in the Bible in order to enter through the narrow gate to return to the kingdom of God.

A group of approximately 10 individuals have been on BYU campus for the past two weeks warning students that they have diverted from the teachings of the Lord as taught in the New Testament.

But when asked in what way Mormons are in error in living the teachings of the Lord, no reply was given.

According to one of the members of the group, who wouldn't identify himself, he and his companions were led to BYU by the spirit to warn people of the close coming of the Lord, and to warn people to start living the teachings of the Lord as written in the New Testament.

One of the individuals has been preaching for a period of five years and has traveled in 48 states and Canada sharing his message and warning.

When asked how they were financed, one member of the group replied that the Lord takes care of the birds of the air and the fowl of the earth, "so why wouldn't he be willing to take care of those who seek to build his kingdom?"

After being warned by BYU Security/Police officers to refrain from preaching on the university's property, one of the members of the group said he would rely on the spirit of the Lord to guide him to an area where people are seeking for truth.

"We are not here to speak of ourselves, but merely inform people to come to know the teachings of the Lord as he taught them in the New Testament," said another group member.

When two of the individuals were asked if pictures could be taken of them, they refused because they consider pictures a form of graven images.

One of the group members said no name is affiliated with their belief, but on many occasions they gather as a group to pray and discuss their teachings.

A Health Science 503 student administers pre-hospital emergency care to a victim of a simulated airplane crash Tuesday.

Fake crash trains students

Screams, moans, blood, burns, compound fractures and amputated limbs shocked bystanders walking behind the Richards Building Tuesday afternoon.

A simulated plane crash, complete with victims, was staged for students taking Health Science 503. "She looks dead!" one rescuer said. "This one has chest injuries," another declared. "Check the vital life signs."

Realistic makeup and moans from volunteer victims created an attitude of urgency among the class members. The program, headed by Drs. Keith Karren and Brent Hafen, is designed to train students to work in pre-hospital emergency care.

"This is a field experience where they have to find victims and examine them first to see what their injuries are," Karren said. "They take care of life-threatening situations first and then broken bones and minor problems."

Class members learn more than advanced first aid, Karren explained. They spend time in various simulated and real experiences. "Students spend at least 12 hours with an ambulance attendant going on real calls," he said. "One guy helped with two cardiac arrests on one night. The ambulance attendant and the hospital said he did an excellent job."

After completing the course, students may become certified emergency medical technicians (EMT) on the state or national level. Certification is not required to complete the course.

During the simulated rescue, one physician, one paramedic and three EMTs were on hand to observe the emergency care administered by the students to the "victims." Karren said the students would be graded on their quick and correct treatment of injuries. After the victims were rescued, a complete report on the exercise would be given by the students followed by evaluations by the trained experts on hand.

Most airplane crash victims do not have the benefit of a whole class of trained EMTs. However, Tuesday's victims are all leading normal lives today, thanks to the quick work of their rescuers.

No swimming, tubing in Provo canal

Trespassers who use the Provo Reservoir Canal without authorization for swimming, tubing, or water skiing will be prosecuted fully, the Provo River Water Users Association has announced.

In a press release, superintendent Hugh McKellar said some segments of the canal properties, including the roadways, are owned by the United States government, and those properties have been posted against trespassing. "However, through other private properties, the United States owns an easement to maintain and operate the canal," McKellar said.

McKellar said swimming, tubing, and water skiing in the canal are prohibited and must be stopped. "Those who might be tempted to engage unlawfully in such activities not only subject themselves to personal injury or death, but pose a threat to the public health and safety," he said.

Four points were stressed by McKellar: (1) Canal water is contaminated because unknown persons wrongfully dump trash and dead animals in the canal.

(2) The waters are cold and murky, and swimming or tubing might result in accidental drowning caused by cramps, inability to climb canal banks, or being drawn into one of the siphons.

(3) Water skiing by being towed behind a motor vehicle driven along the canal roadway not only subjects the participants to personal injury or death, but poses a serious hazard to overflowing the canal bank by running the vehicle off the bank and into the canal.

(4) Trespassers on the canal properties and facilities are in violation of local trespass ordinances, and violators will be prosecuted.

Additional signs warning "no swimming, no tubing, no skiing" have been posted along with the no trespassing signs, McKellar said.

KBYU receives award

KBYU was named recipient of the 1977 Smokey Bear Award, presented by the State Forester's office in a meeting at Sundance Ski Resort Friday.

Karl Kappe, representing the State Forester's Office, made the presentation, and Dennis Campbell of Broadcast Services accepted it in behalf of KBYU.

A spokesman from the Forest Service said the award is given to persons or groups each year to show appreciation for outstanding achievement in fire prevention.

"KBYU made a lot of special announcements for us last year," Kappe said. "With last year's drought, and the serious fire hazards that existed, we felt they played an instrumental part in reminding the public of cautions that should be followed."

Elders enjoy success at BYU

By CLARKE BROWN
Universe Staff Writer

Young men, with newly shorn hair, are seen campus wearing rather plain suits and conservative ties. Most of them are new missionaries in M who are learning a foreign language and wearing either their destination's flag or map on their tag.

There are four missionaries who fit the description better, but who aren't in the process of learning a language.

David Pace, Kevin Tindell, Cyril Abbott and Jim Chalmers are already in their mission — the Utah Salt Lake City Mission — which is the number one speaking mission in the world.

It is no ordinary assignment. They do not only do attend concerts, sporting events and games. They also put in the traditional long hours of proselyting.

It creates a few problems with some of the 1 missionaries on campus, who are critical of the BYU elders seem to have it. Countless the elders have heard such things as, "In my life, we had to work," and "You guys have it

Theirs is no ordinary assignment. They don't tract, but attend concerts, sporting events and devotional

"We wouldn't get very far tracting, so we work mainly from referrals," explains Elder Pace, from Chatsworth, Calif. "Every day we teach, visit with students and stake leaders, check our referral boxes and place pamphlets." "We go where the students are," says Elder Chalmers, an Edmonton, Alberta, Canada native. "We try to stay outside during games, devotionals, concerts, or whatever else is going on. In fact, we passed out a whole packet of referral cards during one concert."

The foursome put in more than 80 hours per week proselyting. "We leave our apartments before 9 a.m. and return home between 9:30 and 10 p.m.," says Elder Tindell, who is from Tampa, Fla.

They are frequently confused with the elders from the LHM, as students often ask them which mission they are going to, but according to Elder Pace, the district leader, more people are beginning to notice them and realize who they are.

"We've put a cougar and a Y above our nametags in an effort to distinguish ourselves a little more," explains Elder Abbott, a Newfoundland, Canada, native.

BYU is familiar ground to companions Pace and Tindell, as both were students here before their missions.

"We both really enjoy being here as missionaries, but it's a lot different than being here as a student," says Elder Pace.

Reactions were varied among the quartet when they learned of their call to the Utah-Salt Lake City Mission.

"I was very disappointed when I read the call," says Elder Chalmers. "I knew for a fact that I was going to Peru, but after praying and receiving a witness, I was excited about it."

"I was very happy right from the start," says Elder Abbott. "I recognized that I was going to a place where I could learn how the church is supposed to be operated in theory."

Elder Tindell sums up his reaction in just one word, "satisfied."

"After the initial shock, 'Utah', I looked forward to it," relates Elder Pace. "My best buddy was here and I had heard of the tremendous success the mission was having."

Utah is a successful mission, recording 3,874 baptisms statewide last year. This year, the goal stands at 6,000. Each of the elders attribute the success to the church members who know their responsibilities, turn in referrals and fellowship investigators.

BYU and St. George are the most successful areas in the mission. The work is going well among the 132 branches on campus, but according to Elder Chalmers, it could go a lot better.

"With all the returned missionaries, prospective missionaries and members here, there is a lot more potential than is being demonstrated," Elder Chalmers says.

"We are here to help and serve the members, and we appreciate the help they've given us so far," adds Elder Pace.

"Students can help us by turning in referrals, fellowshipping the non-members, and getting to know their branch mission leaders."

The elders are available to speak at branches, firesides, and prospective missionary activities. "In fact, we'll speak at anything," Elder Abbott quips.

Elders Pace and Tindell cover the 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 12th stakes while Elders Abbott and Chalmers handle the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 6th and 11th BYU stakes.

Elders Pace and Tindell can be reached at 377-6744, and Elders Abbott and Chalmers can be reached at 374-0422, either before 9 a.m. or after 10 p.m.

BYU high court fines library tunnel off-limit sidewalk

A library tunnel between the Fletcher Building and Wilkinson Center was recently defined as a "K" by the ASBYU Supreme Court, and as such is off limits to all but service vehicles.

The ruling resulted from a case last semester in which a BYU student who received a ticket for parking on the pathway. After being pronounced guilty by the Traffic Court, the student appealed to the ASBYU Supreme Court. The higher court also declared the student guilty, but "because of the way the sign postings" suspended the fine.

Continued in the majority opinion by Chief Justice Chris Burdick, the student wanted to park in the alcove west of the Fletcher Building late one day and discovered the only access was via the tunnel.

The court ruled "any reasonable person by mere observation would conclude that the pathway used for walking. Furthermore, the mere fact that vehicles may be service or non-service, may use the tunnel automatically take it outside the definition of the sidewalk. The court therefore holds that the student is technically guilty of driving on a sidewalk."

Chief Justice Burdick also said in the opinion, "any reasonable person would conclude that the sidewalk and the lack of specific lot markings at the entrance of the parking area."

•Reeder summarizes efforts

Besides being able to fulfill several platform promises, Karen Bybee of the Women's Office, remained busy by being elected regional president of the Associated College Union International (ACU). The ACU board consists of student leaders from 44 colleges in a five state area.

Projects such as the Ugly Man Contest, Club Week, and Provo Clean-up Day were initiated and sponsored this year by the Organizations Office. The Superstar events of October, the Athletics Week in January, and the future visit of baseball superstar Harmon Killebrew have been among the achievements of the Athletics Office.

The Culture Office has been fundamental in assisting and encouraging the development of creative and performing arts at BYU, Reeder said. The Mormon Festival of Arts Ball, a poetry corner featuring six of the top student poets on campus, and a Concerts Impromptu Special Edition with a Disney focus were avenues students had for increasing their cultural awareness.

In closing, Reeder said many students despair because they seem to feel their elected student officers do not always pursue their interests to the hilt.

"There has never been a time in my service as ASBYU president that the administration has displayed a deaf ear or refused to listen to the news of students who have demonstrated concerns, especially when suggestions for improving those concerns were included," Reeder added.

Buddy Program volunteers needed for summer service

Volunteers are needed as representatives of the Buddy Program during spring and summer, according to Karen Bybee, newly appointed director of the program, in the office of School Relations.

"We are interested in finding students — freshmen, sophomores, or juniors — who are willing to help orient new students prior to coming to BYU," Miss Bybee said.

She added that there will be two training seminars held to instruct interested students. The first seminar is Thursday at noon in 562 ELWC and the second is April 11 at 7 p.m. in 172 JRB.

Miss Bybee said, "We need at least one representative to help with the program in each stake. If enough students apply we will use more than one representative."

She said students are needed to help new students with registration and to help orient students in the home states.

"The buddies will show new freshmen and transfer students what to do to prepare to come to BYU," Miss Bybee said.

"The buddy program will keep in touch with each representative and send them information and a packet to help prepare these new incoming students."

Miss Bybee said, "During my freshman year I was a buddy. It was a great experience."

"It's a good opportunity to meet people and to get to know them. A lot of long-lasting relationships have developed with students who have become involved in the buddy program in the past."

Miss Bybee said interested students should either attend one of the seminars or contact the office of School Relations in A-152 ASB or call ext. 4595.

Store hours change

Textbook buy-back to begin

The semi-annual textbook buy-back begins April 14, Roger E. Utley, director of the BYU Bookstore, announced Tuesday. He also announced that new service hours for spring and summer terms begin April 24.

Not all textbooks may be sold back, Utley said. The bookstore uses two processes in determining which books will be bought. First, the bookstore gets a list from the faculty of books to be used during spring, summer and fall semesters. The bookstore will buy back those books at 60 percent of their retail value, Utley explained. "In some cases the buy-back will be limited," he said. If the bookstore has sufficient books in stock, or if class enrollment is limited, the bookstore will buy back only as many books as needed.

Second, the bookstore is working with the Nebraska Book Company, a wholesale book company. Any books not bought by the bookstore may be sold back to the company at wholesale value, he said.

The buy-back will last from April 14 to April 21 on the third floor of the bookstore in the textbook area, Utley said. Students must write their names, addresses and student numbers in the backs of the books, and must have their ID cards with them.

There will be no waiting or having to stand in more than one line, Utley said. Ready cash will be paid for all books.

The new Bookstore service hours are 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday, beginning April 24, Utley said. "Eight-thirty to 5:30 seemed to be the most critical hours," he said. The hours were experimented with last year and "we felt they served the students adequately." The regular hours will resume full semester.

The Bookstore will also be open during semester break.

History awards given to four

Two history majors, a graduate student and a BYU alumnus were recipients of awards given at the seventh annual History Week banquet sponsored by the history department.

History Week participants examined the latest controversy and possible solutions. Kenneth Cannon, Jr., a senior majoring in history from Provo, was the recipient of the Utah State Historical Society Award to the Outstanding History Student of the Year. He received a certificate and a year's subscription to the "Utah Historical Quarterly."

Eric A. Hyer, a senior from Provo majoring in history/Asian Studies, received the LeRoy R. Hafen Award for the Best Undergraduate Paper in History. For his paper titled "Japanese-American Conflicts: The Role of Images from Perry to World War II," he received a certificate and a check for $100.

Elizabeth D. Gee, a graduate student in history from Provo, was the recipient of the Russell B. Swenson Award for the Best Graduate Student Paper in History. For her paper, entitled "The Power of the Utah Territorial Probate Courts: Bench or Pulpit, 1852-1865," she received a certificate and a check for $100.

Mark E. Butler, a former history major now studying law at the University of Chicago, was awarded the William J. Snow Award for Excellence in Western American or Mormon History Studies for his paper, "Mr. Fish's High School: The Impact of Silas L. Fish on Snowflake Union High School." Also a Provo resident, he received a certificate and a check for $100.

Woman Engineers

Department to graduate 2

The BYU electrical engineering department will double its women's graduation quota in April when Sheree Snarr and Linda Morris are handed their diplomas.

Sheree and Linda will be the third and fourth women to graduate from the electrical engineering department.

Sheree, from Murray, who is graduating with a B.S. degree, has six job offers and believes more will be coming. "This is kind of exciting. I don't know which one I'll accept but I do want one that will get me involved with electrical contracting, consulting and construction. I'm in the power option of electrical engineering, which means I'm involved with generators, motors and power supply units."

Linda, from Albuquerque, N.M., is the first woman to graduate from BYU in computer design. She has accepted a job offer from Sperry Univac in Salt Lake City as an associate engineer in Microprocessor Software Computer Design. "I'm sure I'll like the job. I'm interested in computer design and the re-programming of the units."

Both women chose their major because the engineering sciences interested them and gave them the challenge they wanted.

"Math has always interested me," Sheree said.

"When I graduated from high school, I wanted to do more with math than teach high school. My father is an electrical engineer, but my high school math teacher was the one who sparked my interest in engineering."

Linda also said she has always enjoyed math and the sciences. "Electrical engineering just interested me. My mother has her master's in math so I've always had plenty of encouragement."

Linda is currently president of BYU's chapter of Tau Beta Pi, the national engineering honor society. She is also a member of ETA Kappa Nu, an electrical engineering honor society, the Engineering and Technology Joint Council, the Institute of Electronic and Electrical Engineers and is currently serving as its treasurer.

Sheree is also a member of IEEE and is currently serving as secretary.

When asked about women in engineering, Linda responded, "I have never found it a detriment to be female; in a lot of ways I've found it to be an advantage."

Sheree said, "You have to have a lot of self-disciplining and dedication to be in electrical engineering. I'm not a women's libber, but I feel men like ladies in the department."

Language classes fill GE

Two intensive language courses which complete general education Category III "Extramajor Skill" evaluations will be offered spring semester by the French and Spanish departments.

The French department is offering an eight-hour class combining French 101 and 102, according to Thomas H. Brown, department chairman. The Spanish department is offering a 12-hour class, combining Spanish 101, 102 and 201, Carl M. Gibson, department chairman, said.

Successful completion of the Spanish course will satisfy the Category III evaluation, Gibson said. "This was done at the suggestion of the general education people," he said.

Special permission from the dean of Admissions and Records was needed to offer the class, since the normal class load for spring semester is only nine hours. The course will be offered without any increase in tuition, Gibson said.

The French course will allow students to complete their evaluation after taking French 201 summer or fall semester. Brown said, "For most students it would be the entire course work for that term." Students would be in class four hours every day and would be asked to check out cassette tapes of native voices from the resource center.

The professor, Gary Lambert, said he would "try to immerse them (students) as much as possible in the language."

No prerequisites are necessary to take the Spanish course, which is for beginning students, according to Gibson. He said those with language aptitude "will find it a lot easier." Dixon Anderson, professor of Spanish, will teach the course.

Both departments have offered accelerated classes before. The Spanish department has an eight-hour sequence during regular semesters particularly for those with previous language experience, Gibson said. Brown added that the French department also has a nine-hour intensive program for second-year students.

New MBA head appointed

Dr. Martin Wistisen, assistant dean of the Graduate School of Management at BYU, has been appointed director of the Masters of Business Administration program, BYU President Dallin H. Oaks announced Tuesday.

Dr. Paul Thompson, associate professor of business administration, has held a variety of management positions in addition to that of assistant dean of the GSM. He served as associate director and BYU, Wistisen had been involved in economic analysis for Trans World Airlines, finishing his term of employment as director of profit analysis. He also served as a consultant to the LDS church, the governor and legislature of Utah, Utah Power and Light Company, the State Building Board, the Navajo Tribe and several other governmental or business entities.

Dr. Robert H. Daines, a professor of business management who is currently director of the MBA program, will resume full-time teaching duties.

EEG Center diagnoses brains

A new EEG Service Center at LDS Hospital and Primary Children's Medical Center is providing patients in St. George, Cedar City and Burley, Idaho, with immediate brain diagnostic information.

Electrical impulses are carried by telephone from machines placed in hospitals in outlying areas to one of the two hospitals in Salt Lake City.

Garth C. Meyers, M.D., Primary Children's Medical Center, and Madison H. Thomas, M.D., LDS Hospital, are co-directors of the EEG Service Center and interpret the tracings.

Meyers said possible uses of the service are varied. Technicians can test patients in the distant cities and mail the transactions to the Salt Lake City Center. The EEG will then be interpreted and results telephoned to the referring physicians.

In the event the patient is being referred to another physician, the tracing and an interpretation could be in the physician's office before the patient's appointment, he said.

"In emergency cases, tracings can be carried by telephone while testing is being done. This enables immediate interpretation of the EEG, thus facilitating treatment more readily," Meyers said.

The brain, like the heart, generates electricity in wave form, he explained. These impulses travel from electrodes attached to the patient's head, through direct telephone lines, to machines located at the two Salt Lake City Hospitals.

Technicians communicate with coded impulses and a hand phone during the testing procedure to achieve accurate recordings. Meyers said machines "unscramble" the electrical impulses and produce computer printouts for the physician to analyze. The specialist then telephones the results to the doctor requesting the exam.

"EEG testing supplements X-ray in diagnosing patients with seizures, strokes, brain tumors or head injury," he said. "EEGs are also helpful in treating children with hyperactivity, emotional disturbances or learning disabilities."

Thomas said the new EEG service was recently demonstrated when a St. George physician transmitted tests of two seizure patients. "He needed to determine proper selection of medicine," he said.

Another recent emergency involved a possible child abuse case. The child was tested to confirm brain damage before legal action could be taken.

The directors say possibilities for extending the service to other community hospitals in Utah, Idaho, Wyoming and Nevada are now being considered.

Cash prizes awarded to book collectors

The winners of the Student Book Collection Competition were announced at a ceremony in their honor.

The judges of the competition considered the book collections of about 80 students. There were 10 winners.

Clifford Sorenson, a law student from Provo, and Gary L. Pomeroy, a graduate student in Modern European History, won $100 each in the graduate student division.

G. Leon Archibald, a music education major from Billings, Mont., and Ann Woodbury, an English major from Scotia, N.Y., won $100 each in the undergraduate division.

Six other contestants were awarded $25 prizes for their collections: Chris Scmult of Orem, Dana M. Pike of Pelham, N.H., Mark J. Thompson of Provo, W. Bryan Stout of Provo, David J. Whitaker, a graduate student in American History, and James Scott Dunaway of Provo.

The competition was sponsored by the Bookstore, West Energy Control, Bonneville International Corporation and Friends of the Library.

Sweep doubleheader

Cats explode past SUSC

By ANTONE CLARK
Universe Sports Writer

BYU got three consecutive home runs in the eighth inning to beat Southern Utah State College 9-5 in the second game of a twin bill sweep yesterday on the Y baseball diamond.

The Cats whipped the Thunderbirds from Cedar City in the opener 3-0. The doubleheader sweep gives BYU a 16-8 record on the season heading into tomorrow's WAC opener with Utah.

Offensively the Cat machine was awesome pounding out five home runs and 30 hits in just 15 innings, but poor base running and execution made the games closer than they should have been.

"The games were a good tuneup," Coach Gary Pullins said. "A lot of our mental errors came from not playing. The fact that we hadn't played in a week and a half really showed in our base running," he added.

Tyler Steinbach picked up the win for the Cougars in the opener, which was a seven-inning tilt. Steinbach scattered seven hits and yielded just one earned run over the seven innings.

SUSC jumped on Steinbach for one run in the first before BYU put the game away in the third inning. Don Valgardson's two run homer keyed a five run third inning rally giving Steinbach all the support he needed.

Cougars rally

Trailing 1-0 in the bottom of the third, Tim Anderson got things started for the Cats with a single followed by a base hit by Cam Killebrew. Vance Law bunted for a hit with both Anderson and Killebrew scoring on the play because of a throwing error. Clyde Nelson then scored Law with a single to right before Valgardson unleashed a mammoth home run to right center field.

BYU looked like they were giving the Thunderbirds the ball game in the first two innings at the plate. In the bottom of the first, Killebrew led off the inning with a single before being picked off first base. Killebrew was also picked off first in the second game. Law then singled before Nelson rapped into a double play.

In the second inning BYU threatened to break the game wide open as they had bases loaded with just one out. But freshman Cliff Pastornicky grounded into another inning ending double play.

The Cougars added insurance runs in the fifth and the sixth innings. In the fifth, baseman Kim Nelson led off with a double down the right field line. Thomas hit a ground ball to short with Nelson being tagged out before Rick Scribner sent Thomas home on a double to center. Scribner eventually scored on a wild pitch.

Finishing touch

Killebrew added the finishing touch in the first game with a lead-off home run in the sixth. Killebrew's blow, his fourth of the year, was a line drive over the left field fence.

The second game was tight all the way until the Cougars erupted for five runs in the eighth. Killebrew singled to center, followed by Nelson, Thomas and Lenny Tsuhako.

BYU drew first blood with a run in the bottom of the second. Thomas singled with one out and moved to second on Tsuhako's grounder before Murphy Su'a singled him home.

SUSC rallied to tie the score in the third, with a double, a stolen base and a wild pitch. Y starter Rob Blyth was taken out after the next inning however, as the Thunderbirds took the lead with a three run homer.

The score remained 4-1 for Southern Utah until Valgardson once again got the offense going. BYU led off the fifth with singles by Killebrew and Law. Pastornicky then failed to lay down a sacrifice bunt, popped to the pitcher. Valgardson then ped a double to right scoring both runs before Thomas scored Valgardson with a single.

Tom Morris looked impressive in relief as he came on in the fifth to set the T-Birds without problem for three innings. Morris, who Pullins said he will use of the pen this weekend, was impressive. He gave up just one hit and one walk, struck out one, yielded just six ground balls and picked off one runner in his brief appearance.

Pullins pulled Morris after the seventh inning with the score still tied at four. Bill Pittson took the mound for the only time to yield an unearned run in the eighth and giving SUSC a temporary 5-4 lead.

The dam then broke for BYU. Nelson led off with a homer, followed by Thomas and Tsuhako. Then with two Killebrew and Law both walked and on a Thunderbird error.

Hitting stars on the afternoon for were Killebrew, Law, Valgardson, Thomas, Thomas, who entered the hitting .338 was five for seven scoring runs and knocking in two. Killebrew and Law were both four for seven at the plate with Killebrew scoring four times and three. Valgardson was four for nine plate with four RBIs.

K. Nelson also had a good day with hits in seven trips to the plate. All of them were for extra bases however.

Pullins said he plans to start John Toroff (2-0) tomorrow against the Utah Gary Peterson (2-0) and Axle Hardy scheduled to go Friday and Saturday.

Cougar shortstop Vance Law makes a lunge for first base to avoid being picked off by the SUSC pitcher in Monday's action. Law remains one of BYU's leading hitters.

Valgardson: a name you won't forget

By ANTONE CLARK
Universe Sports Writer

It was late in the 1977 baseball season and the Cougars were hosting the Boise State Broncos in an afternoon doubleheader. Two fans sat in the stands discussing the merits of the '77 Cats. One fan, a Y student, was busily engaged in telling the other gentleman, a visitor from Philadelphia, the strengths and weaknesses of the Cougar nine.

The student spent most of his time lauding the play and honors of All-America third baseman Kim Nelson. But the visitor's eye wasn't on Nelson—he was looking at a tall, muscular figure playing first base for BYU.

"Man, who is that first baseman?" the Philadelphian asked. The query came in reaction to the slugger's grand slam home run. It was his second round tripper of the afternoon. "What is that guy's name, anyway?"

Homers memorable The man's name is Don Valgardson. And if you have trouble remembering his name you shouldn't have trouble remembering his home runs. He treated Cougar fans to several mammoth blasts last year and promises to wallop a few in front of the home town folks again this season.

But Valgardson says he is more than just a home run hitter. The Provo native said he doesn't go to the plate looking to hit the long bombs but rather to "make contact and hit the ball hard. The home runs just come."

Statistics Statistics show that he can do more with the bat than hit home runs. Last season he compiled a .346 batting average to go along with 13 home runs and 54 RBIs, winning all-WAC honors.

This season Valgardson is currently hitting .384, with eight home runs and 33 RBIs in just 24 games. Of his 30 hits, 14 have been for extra bases.

Valgardson said he feels he has also improved defensively. "I've improved my defense at least 50 percent," he said. "I've worked hard and now I feel more confident in the field."

Coach Gary Pullins agrees. "When I first came here people told me that Don Valgardson would never be able to play a good first base," Pullins said. "He's not a Wes Parker but he is a good defensive player who isn't going to hurt anybody in the field."

All-American The senior from Provo has always had a way of standing out in athletic competition. He has won All-America honors in two sports.

As a freshman baseball player at Ricks College he earned Junior College All-America first team honors. That same season he treated Ricks fans to a home run they will never forget. He walloped a pitch over the right field fence onto the top of the nearby Hart Fieldhouse some 475 feet away. The blast is a junior college record.

Also playing football for Ricks, Valgardson won ICAC first team honors his freshman year as an offensive guard on the football squad. As a sophomore griddier, he won All-America first team honors.

Knee operation After transferring to BYU, Valgardson was left to make a decision between football and baseball. He said a knee injury made that decision for him. "I had a knee operation in the spring of 1976 and I decided then to stick to baseball," Valgardson said. The decision to pursue baseball only has helped, he added.

As a local boy, playing for BYU is a dream come true for Valgardson. "I've always wanted to play for BYU," he said. "My wife and family get to watch me play."

They're my biggest fans."

Confidence has made the big difference according to the Provo native. "Confidence is the toughest thing in baseball," Valgardson said. Pullins said he felt Valgardson just needed playing time to increase his confidence. "All Don needed to gain confidence was to play baseball. He just needed some instruction and a chance to practice," Pullins said. "I knew his strength and ability would take over."

Evidence of his growing confidence is Valgardson's recent performance in the Spartan Classic in San Jose, Calif. During the tournament he went 13 for 27 at the plate, winning the tourney's MVP award.

This season, Valgardson has set two goals for himself—hit 350 and slam 15 home runs. He's well on the way toward these goals. The ultimate goal for the long-ball slugger is a professional baseball career. "I've always dreamed of being able to play professional baseball and now that dream is becoming a reality," he said. Pullins said he thinks his first baseman is a prime professional prospect. "If he continues to improve like he has, there's no question that he is a definite pro prospect."

Should Valgardson continue at his present pace other Philadelphians may soon be asking, "Who is that first baseman, anyway?"

Cougar slugger Don Valgardson swings enroute to his eighth home of the season Monday against Southern Utah. The native of Provo All-WAC last year and is vying for All-American honors this season.

Toronto stadium to unveil $2.5 million scoreboard

TORONTO (AP)—When the Detroit Tigers' leadoff batter steps to the plate in the first inning of the Toronto Blue Jays' home opener April 14, he'll be staring at a familiar face—his own.

New scoreboard The player, expected to be Ron LeFlore, will see his picture prominently displayed on a new $2.5 million scoreboard located beyond the center field fence, as well as his batting average, home run total and any other relevant statistics.

It is one of the most expensive and sophisticated scoreboards constructed for any sports stadium and will require a crew of six to operate it.

Board tricks "At the first home stand, we will have all the basic information programmed into the computer," said Craig Bakay, who heads the scoreboard team. "But by the second home stand, we'll be able to do more complicated things."

Steward-Warner, the company that built the board, has also built electronic scoreboards for the California Angels, Pittsburgh Pirates, Kansas City Royals, a new stadium in Honolulu, Los Angeles Coliseum, the Spectrum in Philadelphia and the Anaheim Convention Center.

TV pictures The Exhibition Stadium scoreboard can give television-style pictures on a screen 23 feet, four inches high and 36 feet, six inches long, with 15,660 light bulbs, which can produce 16 shades of light.

Photographs of all the Blue Jays—and Toronto Argonauts when the Canadian Football league season gets under way—will be flashed on the screen.

Bowlers take second in Boise tournament

BYU's bowling teams closed out the season Saturday at Boise State University in Idaho, finishing fourth in the Northwest tournament.

The Cougars were in second place before the final roll-off but a talented University of Montana team held onto the lead to win first place and a berth in the national finals.

BYU Coach Shafter Bown said he was pleased with the team's showing. "We do not have to take a back seat to anyone," he said, noting that the team finished with an overall average of 195.

The men's team was led by Allen Rowe with an average of 205 followed by Gordon Terakami with a 202 average and a three-game high series of 694.

He was followed by Ron Freeman with a 184 and Jay Hawkins with a 181.

The final team standings were: Montana, 9003; Oregon, 8815; California-Davis 8810; BYU 8775; Mount Hood, 8419; and Oregon State, 8286.

The BYU women finished second behind a Montana team which averaged 176 to win a trip to the National finals in Milwaukee, Wis. Carol Larsen had the high average for the BYU team.

Women's teams from Portland Community College, University of Oregon and Oregon State also competed.

"Overall this has been a good year for our teams. Our women got off to a good start at the beginning of the year by winning the Boise State Invitational," said Bown.

BYU's Allen Rowe will head for the national finals this week to represent BYU and Region 13 in the individual competition.

Bjorn Borg in top form as WCT tennis continues

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Wimbledon champion Bjorn Borg has shown he is in peak form as the World Championship Tennis circuit moves to Rotterdam this week.

In Holland, the 21-year-old Swede, an almost faultless tennis machine, could score his third victory in a WCT event and his fifth major success of the season, one in which he already has amassed $260,000.

In Rotterdam, however, Borg could clash with American ace Jimmy Connors, top seed in the Dutch tournament.

In Milan, Borg easily defeated top-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis of the United States 6-3, 6-3. The American faced problems with his serve and was less aggressive than usual in Sunday's final, worth $30,000.

Gerulaitis also seemed to suffer from a sort of inferiority complex as he lost to the Swede for the seventh time in seven meetings. His losses included a Wimbledon semifinal last year and the Tournament of Champions in Las Vegas, Nev., last week.

One good opportunity would be Wimbledon this summer.

"Playing on grass, such as in Wimbledon, makes my play faster and more aggressive," Gerulaitis explained.

Green plays darkhorse part

USTA, Ga. (AP) — He has won more tournaments than Hale Irwin or Ray Floyd, more than Tom or Al Geilberger, more than Miller Barber, January, Dave Hill or Frank Beard.

A $1-million winner, opinionated and occasionally outspoken, he displayed enormous personal courage.

His favorite of the galleries, one of golf's more players with the fans, for reasons unknown, Hubert Green rarely is among the current greats of the game; that is, until he comes lashing down the fairway with that peculiar, quick swing of his, nailing a here, out-scoring a Floyd there.

Though he won the U.S. Open last season, he was overlooked in the drama of the continuing Watson-Jack Nicklaus battles. But since last June he has won as often as either of those more glamorous names.

And he brings his ancient, age-unknown, green-gripped putter into this week's Masters with current credentials as good as anyone's — two victories this season, a winner his last time out, collector of $117,499 in official earnings.

His confidence is at a high point off a victory in his last start, the prestigious Heritage Classic. "I'm a better golfer now than ever before," he said. "That doesn't mean I'm going to play better this week than I ever have. It means that over a period of time I'm a better, smarter player than I have been."

And the tough-minded, tour-tested Green is wholly unafraid. His courage and ability to perform under pressure were confirmed last year when he won the national championship despite playing the last few holes knowing a death threat had been made against him.

"It's not the kind of thing I want to talk about," he said. "It just gives other sick people ideas."

Green, now the winner of 14 tour titles, has secured his place in the game. But he wants to improve it — and that improvement, for a player of his caliber and ranking, comes only in the major events.

"Anyone out here on the tour wants to be a great player. It's a natural ambition. My definition of a great player is one who wins great tournaments where all the other great players are competing. A great player wins those, and wins more than once."

All factors indicate the dark-haired man with the deep-set eyes has a better than good opportunity to achieve a second major crown this week. His game is reaching a peak. His credentials are all in order. His confidence is high.

"You can never predict you're going to win a particular tournament," Green said. "You can never guess that until the last few holes."

"But whenever I play, I think I can win. And I'm trying to win. I never give up until I'm finished."

'Annie Hall' wins

Oscar night filled with surprises

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—At 50, Oscar has come alive again. The 50th annual Academy Awards show was a lively birthday party for the little guy, complete with a genuine political brouhaha and some of the "best" Oscars going to a man who was too nervous to show up at the affair.

Woody Allen's bittersweet remembrance of his life's love, "Annie Hall," won four of the most prestigious Oscars, including Best Picture, and 1977's runaway box office favorite, "Star Wars," won six, most of them in technical categories, and a special award for sound effects.

Diane Keaton, a first-time nominee and Allen's former real-life sweetheart, was named Best Actress for her close-to-life portrayal of the flighty "Annie Hall."

Richard Dreyfuss, also a first-time nominee, won a Best Actor Oscar for his portrayal of a frustrated actor sharing a New York apartment with an unwilling Marsha Mason in "The Goodbye Girl."

"Julia," a tale of underground efforts in Nazi Germany, based on a section of Lillian Hellman's "Pentimento" won three Oscars, but another favorite, "The Turning Point," was shut out.

Besides the glamour, there was a little bit of old-fashioned controversy, courtesy of the Best Supporting Actress winner, Vanessa Redgrave. Miss Redgrave's nomination prompted protests from some quarters because of a pro-Palestinian documentary she financed. She accepted her Oscar with the usual thanks, and then told the Academy:

"I think you should be very proud that in the last few weeks you've stood firm and you've refused to be intimidated by the threats of a small bunch of Zionist hoodlums whose behavior here (she was interrupted by a collective audience gasp) whose behavior here is an insult to the stature of Jews all over the world."

Her comments were later attacked by playwright Paddy Chayefsky, who told the audience he was "sick and tired of people exploiting the Academy Awards for the propagation of their own political propaganda."

He suggested to Miss Redgrave that "a simple thank you would have sufficed."

Allen's impressive score for "Annie Hall" — Best Actress, Best Director, Best Original Screenplay and Best Picture — also caused some buzzing.

When "Annie Hall" producer Charles Joffe telephoned Allen in New York to tell him how his nervous romance fared, Allen replied, "Don't bother me, I'll talk to you in the morning."

"He was asleep," Joffe explained. He said that Allen was not protesting anything by his absence, just that "Woody finds it difficult to accept any kind of award of this kind. That's just his personality. He'd find it very difficult to stand up here before you."

Jason Robards picked up his second straight Best Supporting Actor award, the first time that Oscar has been dealt to the same man in consecutive years. He won for his portrayal of mystery writer Dashiell Hammett in "Julia."

Last year, he won in the same category for his portrayal of Washington Post editor Ben Bradlee in "All the President's Men."

Robards, the consummate Eugene O'Neill player, was in New York Monday with the O'Neill play "A Touch of the Poet."

In the spirit of homage to Old Hollywood, Bob Hope was back as the Oscar host, his 14th such solo gig. Altogether, it was Hope's 23rd appearance on the show although, as he is ever ready to remind, he has never taken an Oscar home.

Hope paid respects to John Wayne, who is in Boston recovering from open heart surgery.

"We want you to know, Duke, we miss you tonight," Hope said. "We expect to see you amble out here in person next year, because no one else can walk in John Wayne's boots."

The French "Madame Rosa," starring Simone Signoret, was chosen Best Foreign Film.

"You Light Up My Life" won a Best Original Song Oscar for writer Joe Brooks. The tune, as recorded by Jehey Boone, was the year's top pop hit, and its selection was expected. John Williams won Best Original Score for "Star Wars."

Western U.S. topic of show

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Robert Conrad and Richard Chamberlain will star in NBC's 25-hour adaptation of James A. Michener's "Centennial," about the events that shaped the West.

Conrad plays the hardy French trader Pasquinel and Chamberlain is McKee, the red-bearded fugitive who flees Scotland after killing a Highland lord in defense of his sister. The two become partners when the Frenchman rescues McKee from the Pawnees.

The entire production will be filmed on location in Colorado and Kentucky. It will premiere next season with a three-hour show, then be followed by episodes of two hours each.

Syndicated program alternative to reruns

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Each week night, before prime-time network programs begin, the usual TV wares are syndicated game, talk or nature shows, or reruns of reruns. But an alternative to all this is afoot.

It's "PM Magazine," a concept for a locally produced program of feature stories, "informational" material and hosted by staffers of each station airing the half-hour show Mondays through Fridays.

"PM" was cooked up by the New York-based Group W broadcast chain, and has its origins in the "Evening Magazine" local shows that air on the firm's stations in San Francisco and four other cities.

Win Baker, president of Group W's TV stations division, says 10 stations already are signed for "PM Magazine" and perhaps double that will be airing the show when it starts in September.

In the "PM" project, he says, Group W provides two general interest feature stories each night, plus "tips," or short reports on health, home life and leisure-time activities.

The company advises stations on how best to incorporate this material with their own features and reports that also would appear in each local edition of "PM Magazine," he added.

And, if the stations feel their reports may be of national interest, they could make it available through Group W to all stations flying the "PM Magazine" banner, he said.

What it boils down to, Baker says, "is that we're selling them the elements of a story material and 'tips' and expertise, plus consultation on the format."

Middle ages to be center of concert

Instrumental music of the late Middle ages and Renaissance periods will be performed by the BYU Early Music Consort today at 8 p.m. in the Madson Recital Hall, HFAC Dr. Harrison Powley, Consort Director, will be the featured lecturer and will speak on the historical and biographical backgrounds of the music and composers.

According to Dr. Powley, the Early Music Consort will highlight seven musical types. They include motets from the Bamberg Manuscript, music of Guillaume Dufay and Josquin des Pres, music from "Musica Nova," madrigals from "Il Trionfo di Dori," Ornamented Music and Consort music.

The musical selections will be performed on such ancient instruments as the recorder, crumhorn, viol, sackbut and the harpsichord.

and getting the show started."

He said costs of producing a local "PM" show would be about the same.

Russian revolution subject of show

Lenin, played by Patrick Stewart, is featured, as KBYU's historical dramatic series "Fall of Eagles" brings the Secret War of 1916 to the screen tonight at 7 on Channel 11.

The play deals with the wooing and dispatch of V.I. Lenin, who was behind the overthrow of the Russian Tsar in the Russian Revolution. Lenin was brought back to Russia through the efforts of the head of Germany when Russian leaders rejected Germany's overtures.

KBYU news staffers win RMCPA awards

KBYU News staffers won seven first place awards, more than any other school-operated broadcasting station in a nine-state area, in the 1977-78 Rocky Mountain Collegiate Press Association contest.

The competition is held for communications students working in television and radio stations in Utah, Colorado, Texas, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nevada, Arizona, Wyoming and Montana.

KBYU-TV's Newsroom 11 was voted as the best television news program of the contest. Judge Dan Rosen called the weeknight news show "very slick and professional looking," in his evaluation.

Rosen went on to call the show one of the best student productions in the United States.

First place awards for Newsroom 11 went to anchorpersons Sheila Ellerton and Michelle Milne, reporter Scott Berrett and Sportscaster Harvey J. North as well as to producer Colleen Schulthies.

KBYU reporter Michael Peterman's Heritage Mountain series won first place as the best documentary of the competition. Bruce Seely also won one first place and two second place awards.

Second place awards were also presented to Jim Loveland for his news feature on Cancer research at BYU, which aired nationally on PBS, and to Ron Bellus.

Radio News anchor and producer Scott Hammond won a third place award.

represent the Dallas Cowboys." Mrs. Mitchell said, "they are not allowed to attend parties or business meetings, drink alcohol or chew gum. They wear no jewelry with their uniforms and they are never, ever to be seen in hair rollers. Basically, they are to be ladies at all times."

All 32 perform at every home game. "They do a pre-game and half-time show and cheer during the game," Mrs. Mitchell said.

For all this, each cheerleader receives $15 a game and national exposure. Their talents and beauty have hardly gone unnoticed. In addition to the men who watch the cheerleaders more than they watch the game, the William Morris Talent Agency has also watched closely. The cheerleaders recently signed a contract with the agency, which will now handle all their national bookings.

"They have to get used to it because they only perform at home games and it can get up to 130 degrees on the field in Texas Stadium."

During the regular season, practices are held two or three nights per week. If a cheerleader misses one rehearsal before a game, she won't perform at that game. If she misses two rehearsals, she is released from the squad.

The cheerleaders have an additional set of strict standards. "When they

Lectures
The Engineering and Technology College will hold its monthly lecture series Thursday at 10 a.m. in the delong Concert Hall, HPAC. John W. Thatcher, director of Region 6 of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineering, will discuss factors important to a successful engineering career.

A Planetarium Lecture will be held Thursday in the Sumner's Planetarium, 422 E. 2nd at 7:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. The construction of a horseshoe will be described and the claims of astrologers will be critically examined. Admission, $5.00 (free for the public, 25 cents for students).

Dr. Phyllis Jacobson, chairman of the BYU women's physical education department, will speak Wednesday, "The Menstrual Practice Good Health?" The lecture will begin at 8 p.m. in the BYU Alumni House, and a nominal admission charge will be required for those without season tickets.

Jan J. Erteschek, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the Utah Company, will speak at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday in 184 JKB as part of the Executive Lecture Series.

"How to Avoid Being Seduced?" will be the topic of the final address of the "Light Your Love" lecture series sponsored by the Rocky Mountain Family Institute Thursday at 7:30 p.m. Dr. A. Lynn Scoresby, BYU professor of CDFR, will speak.

Dr. Merla G. Myers, chairman of the Department of Anthropology and Archaeology, will present a lecture and film presentation at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in 406 MARB. He will discuss crime and capital punishment.

Meetings
Graduate Student Council meeting will be held Thursday at 5 p.m. in 110 ELWC. All graduate students are invited.

The Utah Association of Women is sponsoring a free public information meeting on the topic of the history and objectives of the feminist movement and the pros and cons of the equal rights movement. The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. April 19 at the Provo High School Cafeteria. The public is invited to attend.

A mock civil trial will be held Wednesday at 7 p.m. in 303 JKB. Students and public are invited to attend.

Tests
A Language Test will be offered for those wishing credit in Afrikaans. Those interested should contact the secretary of the Language and Intercultural Research Center and register by Friday. The test will be administered at 9 a.m. Saturday. For further information, call ext. 2651.

Jobs
"Century 21" the BYU student journal, is looking for qualified students to fill editorial positions on next year's staff. Students from all majors are encouraged to apply, but editors must have the ability to work effectively with the language. Application forms may be picked up in the English office, A-246 JKB, and must be turned in no later than 5 p.m. on Friday.

Troups
"Elders and Sisters," a musical play by Orson Scott Card, will be holding tryouts Friday in Salt Lake City at the Ed Crane Dance Studio, 55 E. 400 South. Tryouts will be from 6 to 9 p.m., and those auditioning should come prepared with a musical number and a one-minute dramatic or comic monologue. Tryouts will be held in Provo on Saturday from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Utah Power and Light Company. For further information, contact Russell Card at 225-4841 or Orson Card at 355-0419.

Reunions
El Paso State Reunion will be held Saturday from 1:30-6 p.m. Activities will include softball and dinner. Missionaries welcome. For further information, call 375-8683 or 375-7461.

Most classes for spring still available

Students need not despair if they missed the spring term first priority deadline.

Douglas J. Bell, assistant registrar, said "Students shouldn't put off registration because they missed the first priority deadline. Most classes are still available."

"Out of 2,000 classes available, only 152 are closed," Bell said.

Students should receive spring term confirmation forms this week.

Bell said more than 97 percent of the students received their "ideal class schedule" except for one class. He also said more than 90 percent of the first priority applicants received complete schedules for the number of hours requested.

Bell said the system is improving because more students receive their preferred schedules. In the spring term of 1974, with approximately the same number of students registering, 650 fewer students received an "ideal" schedule.

Canyons, Provo River take annual death toll

Every year at this time various public safety organizations issue warnings to zealous but inexperienced students to avoid climbing in slippery canyons and swimming in deadly rivers. And every year the icy Provo River and treacherous canyons have taken their toll of BYU students who were only out for an afternoon climb or a little recreation in the spring sunshine.

In the past three school years, only one student has met his death in the canyons, but this one is one too many. Unfamiliar to the area, he was climbing in Rock Canyon in an area that exceeded his climbing ability when he slipped and fell. Another student was killed in a scuba diving accident. During the same period of time, according to J. Elliot Cameron, Dean of Student Life, five students have been involved in serious hiking accidents and three in serious water-related accidents, all requiring the students to miss school for an extended length of time. Of the total 152 students involved in accidents of various kinds during this time, 80 have had to leave school, while the others were able to return after missing several days.

Others have unexpectedly spent a chilly evening lost in the mountains because they were traveling unfamiliar trails and did not anticipate the rapid darkness that follows warm spring afternoons.

Perhaps these victims were unfamiliar with the dangers, perhaps only careless. At any rate such tragedies are needless and avoidable. Accidents like these can be avoided by paying attention to warnings and staying out of known danger areas.

Included among particularly hazardous areas is the Provo River, because of its deep undercurrents and whirlpools, its many rocks which can easily upset a canoe and its extremely cold water which induces cramps very quickly. The river seems to hold a particular fascination for unsuspecting swimmers and inner-tubers.

The Murdoch canal, which flows out of Provo Canyon also contains underwater siphons, which act like whirlpools to hold its victims at the bottom of the water, according to security officers. Though no fatalities have been recorded there yet, it is nevertheless extremely dangerous.

Also to be avoided are the mountains east of campus, at any level above the foothills, because of the numerous cliffs and excessive loose shale which make them very slippery.

Other common accidents which occur more frequently in the spring are driving accidents, especially during the semester break. Dean Cameron offers this advice to traveling students: Get proper rest, don't try to drive all night, drive defensively and "don't assume everyone you meet on the road is in the same condition as you are."

Every year the warnings go out. And every year, somebody has to learn the hard way. Don't be one of them, we want you back.

Arab, Panama conflicts solved with new canal

Y's & Wherefors

Tops on the list of perpetual current events that never lose their currency is that Panamanian monstrosity called a canal and running a close second is that fighting back of love between the Israelis and Palestinian Arabs.

So weary am I of the war over the canal and the debate in the Midwest, that I'm at last willing to make a suggestion.

First, Congress must accept the resolution of the ratification of the Panama Canal Treaty—a concession given to the U.S. the right to negotiate on building and operating a second canal in any country in the Western Hemisphere. And second, I call on Congress to give the mosquito-infested Panama Canal, which is too narrow to sail our warships through anyway, to the Panamanians. I propose we build one that's all ours—across the continental U.S.—joining the Pacific to the Atlantic. Think what a boon such a canal could be. Our dilapidated railroad system could at last be given a decent burial and cut-backs in airfare and the obliteration of the Mason-Dixon Line will make life much simpler.

And who could better build such a canal than the now-homeless Palestinian Arabs? What the trans-continental railroad did for the Chinese coolies in the 1800s, the American canal can do for the guerrillas.

And when the job is done, why not give the Arabs a homeland of their own, somewhere in downtown San Francisco?

Lee Library hours typical of other major universities

It is unfortunate that Tim Olson did not take the time to contact the library administrators or do some research before writing his editorial on the Harold B. Lee Library hours. Had he done so, he would have become aware of the following information:

1. The Lee Library is open 96 hours a week, not including Sunday, and closes at 11 p.m. daily. By way of a brief but typical comparison: The University of Utah library is open 98 hours a week, including Sunday, and closes at 11 p.m. except on Friday and Saturday when it closes at 8 p.m. The University of Minnesota library is open 101 hours a week, including Sunday, and closes at 11 p.m. each day. The University of Tennessee library is open 98 hours a week, including Sunday, and closes at 11:30 p.m. except on Saturday when it closes at 8 p.m. Arizona State University library is open 101 hours a week, including Sunday, and closes at 11 p.m. except on Saturday, when it closes at 8 p.m.

2. The above comparison of library hours shows the Lee Library to be in line with other major university libraries. The difference seems to be that other libraries are open on Sunday, while our library is closed, and other libraries close earlier on Friday and Saturday, while our library stays open to compensate for being closed on Sunday. I know of no university library that stays open 24 hours a day as Tim Olson indicates. If there are any, they are certainly unique; and their hours probably relate to special circumstances. Libraries on university campuses that do have late hours are typically small, special libraries such as law and medical libraries.

3. The Lee Library stays open until 1 a.m. the week before finals and the week of finals. We have found that the library is not heavily used during these extended hours. Last fall there was an average of 300 students an evening in the library between 11 p.m. and midnight, and an average of 179 students an evening in the library between midnight and 1 a.m. If this is the case during finals, which is presumably a heavy study period, it does not seem likely that the rest of the semester would show as much use during extended hours. Our policy is to establish library hours that are of interest and benefit to the majority of students.

4. During this past year, the David O. McKay Institute on campus has been conducting a student survey for the Lee Library. One of the survey questions dealt with library hours. The response to this question shows that only 11 percent of the students surveyed would "often" use the library between 11 p.m. and midnight; 33 percent would "never" use it during that time; and 56 percent would use it "sometimes." Concerning the midnight to 1 a.m. hour, only 6 percent indicated they would "often" use the library at this time; 55 percent would "never" use it during this hour; and 39 percent would only use it "sometimes."

Now, BYU is not the "only up-and-coming, national academic power whose library still closes at 11 p.m.," as Tim Olson would have readers believe; nor is our library policy "abundant" when compared to other university libraries.

Better labeling needed for imitation foods

Meat and dairy substitutes, made of carefully combined vegetable products and chemicals, intermingle with the real thing in modern grocery freezers. In some cases, consumers can easily discern these impostors, while in many cases the distinction is difficult to make.

A visit to the supermarket reveals that few meat products containing textured vegetable protein (TVP) combined with real meat are clearly labeled to that effect. Many products, including frozen pizzas and pre-cooked chicken fried beef patties, mention TVP only in the small print ingredient list.

Contrary to popular belief, the consumer does not always save money when buying the imitation product instead of the real thing. "Cholesterol free breakfast patties," containing vegetable protein, soybean, corn and cottonseed oils, egg albumen, oats and no meat, cost $1.09 for 8 oz., the same price as a pound of 100 percent lean ground beef. Pre-cooked chicken fried beef patties, combining meat with TVP and hydrolyzed plant protein, cost $1.29 per pound.

Imitation dairy products offer some savings, if the consumer can stand the thought of what he is eating. An artificial dessert topping, packaged in a pressurized can, contains hydrogenated palm oil, an edible fat often used in making soap. The topping also contains propylene glycol, a liquid made from petroleum. This liquid is used as an antifreeze and as a hydraulic brake fluid. The pressurized chemical which propels the topping from the container is nitrous oxide, commonly known as "laughing gas."

The dessert topping costs 99 cents for 8 oz., the same price as 6 1/2 oz. of real cream topping, containing none of these unappetizing ingredients. But even though the consumer gets an extra ounce and a half for the same price by buying the impostor instead of the real thing, the strange substances hardly make it a bargain.

Obviously, consumers who purchase these meat and dairy fakes save little money while manufacturers of the substitutes are making high profits. The cost to manufacturers of vegetable and chemical ingredients is much less than the cost of the real thing. But little, if any, of the savings is passed on to consumers. Often manufacturers price the substitutes only a few cents less than the genuine products, in order to sway consumers over to their imitation products.

When manufacturers make artificial products which are nutritionally equal to the real thing, they are not required by the Food and Drug Administration to label the products as "imitation." Therefore, unless they read the small print, consumers may believe that partially or completely artificial meat and dairy products are entirely genuine.

Consumers have the right to know what their grocery purchases contain and whether or not they are getting a fair share of the savings on artificial products. These rights can best be met by clearer labeling of products containing vegetable and chemical substitutes and greater media discussion of the facts about cost, manufacture and pricing of meat and dairy impostors.

Cyclists, freedom, sugglers etter topics

Cyclist wants fair shake

Editor: It has become quite apparent to me that many of BYU's pedestrians can't even read yet. It never fails every time I ride my bike up or down the bike ramps, some careless pedestrian has wandered or is in the process of wandering onto the bike path—a not very bright move! It is inevitable that a few wild cyclists do exist, but many safety conscious riders do, too.

One accident I witnessed on a ramp was not completely the fault of the bicycle rider. Because a group of pedestrians were blocking the bike path, the cyclist was forced to go onto the pedestrian path. Just as he did, though, another pedestrian stepped out in front of him and was struck down. I have had many close calls such as that one because the pedestrian wasn't watching where he was walking.

So what is the solution? Here are a few simple suggestions: 1. Ticket those pedestrians who walk in the bike paths on the ramps. It would be more money in BYU's pocket.

2. Mark the paths more clearly. At Helaman Halls, the sign at the ramp is too high to notice if someone isn't looking for it, and the 10 mph sign is too close to the bushes to do any good. The signs painted on the ramps are worn off right now, and need to be painted in bolder colors other than black and white. Warning signs should also be posted.

3. Put up some kind of divider between the paths like a fence or small cement wall found on some highways, or whatever else that would be inexpensive and easy to install.

Please don't take our right to ride down the ramps away. You'll only be putting us into the streets where, if hit, far more serious injuries will occur. The vehicles don't even watch out for the pedestrians at designated cross walks, why should they care about bicycle riders?

If improvements are not made on the ramps, the problem won't be solved. The only thing to do then is to prohibit any bicycles on campus at all which is too drastic a measure when a few simple improvements will solve everything.

Pedestrians will continue to hit and cyclists hit and frustrated until someone does something rational about it. Give BYU's present and future cyclists a fair shake for once.

$5 is hard bargain
Editor: There are undergraduate students, working on our campus, who are making $5 per hour. I wasn't aware of the opportunities to make such good money until last night at our intramural basketball game. When our referee didn't show up, we desperately sought someone to take his place.

Much to our dismay, the only person who would even consider it wanted to be paid. Having no other choice, we offered him $3, but that wasn't good enough—he wanted $5. After that experience, I became aware of the fact that such hiring of officials is a common practice in BYU intramurals. I have nothing against capitalism, but I do stand behind the wise teachings of some great men who declare, "Thou shalt not drive a hard bargain." It is one thing to accept money for doing a favor, it is another to look for money-making favors which may need doing and then setting the price for such favors (as some of the intramural refs do). I am not complaining about the questionable quality of the intramural referees, but I want others to be enlightened, as I have been, about the unchristian practice known as "taking advantage of thy neighbor" or "driving a hard bargain."

—Terry C. Gosney
Provo

Tournament disappointing

Editor: Since coming to BYU I have noticed that one of the positive factors that was stressed in publications, information pamphlets, and even in a few presentations during orientation was the fact that BYU has one of the finest intramural programs of any university. Believing this to be the case, my tennis partner and I entered the intramural coed tennis (mixed doubles) tournament. This turned out to be run more like a grade school contest than the official tennis tournament that it should have been.

The first afternoon was qualification rounds. The tournament director called us all over and said, "Well, who would like to play whom?" What ever happened to the scheduling of matches? He then proceeded to say, "We haven't got a lot of time to play so if it looks like the set is going to be long, come back here and we'll just decide something." Apparently the players were to have a short debate on who they thought should be the winners if they took too long playing.

BYU has some excellent, well-lighted indoor tennis courts. Surely an intramural tennis tournament would merit the use of these. But instead we were condemned to the use of the worst courts on campus, the Helaman Halls tennis courts. What's more, we had to play one of our matches at night under the makeshift lights they have, with two of the five lights burned out.

Professional tennis matches consist of five sets and a regular match is three sets. This tournament would allow for only one set to be played. Playing just one set doesn't really determine which pair of players is superior.

I realize that this tournament might not be representative of how all BYU intramural activities are run, but I hope the coed tennis tournament will be upgraded from the joke that it was this year to a higher level next year.

Time for freedom

Editor: For a long time now I've been very disturbed about some occurrences here at BYU. Due to two articles that appeared in Tuesday's Universe, I feel that it is time for me to speak my mind. I was pleased and proud to see the emphasis that was placed on freedom in the articles about the founding of the Wells Freedom Archives. I agree with Elder Benson that "freedom is a God-given eternal principle," and with Dr. Wells that "the problems of the world can be overcome by living the gospel and the principles of individual freedom."

However, I think I might add that our emphasis on freedom should be based on the actions and attitudes which cause us to be accidentally, or intentionally, eliminate the freedoms which we hold so dear.

Many will of course argue that this free expression is irresponsible, and therefore should not be allowed. This, however, sounds like the excuse the "systems of slavery" used to curtail the freedoms that are so fundamental to our growth as a good society.

My appeal then is that in the spirit of the founding of these freedom archives, we all might rid ourselves, both individually and collectively, of the actions and attitudes which cause us to accidentally, or intentionally, eliminate the freedoms which we hold so dear.

With all my heart I exhort the administration to relax the restraints that to this point hindered BYU from reaching its prophetic destiny. Let us all go forward from the renewal of this so important and fundamental principle to the full expression of our heritage as descendants of God. Let this founding of this freedom archive also

Fundamental creativity for balanced class

The new educational wave has a basic-to-basics approach. Declining scores on college entrance examinations have frightened educators into renewing emphasis on the three R's. Basic education throughout the country requiring students to pass competency tests in reading, writing, mathematics to graduate from school.

This fundamentalist movement is necessary but should not be too far. It is to be hoped that it will edge out some of the creative pre-developed during the 60s which had positive results.

Prior to the experimental movement students were immersed for six hours in classrooms where they were fed concepts but given little chance to apply them.

This may have been overdone with later trends toward "classrooms" and practical instruction. Obviously, some sort of balance between the two must be attained.

But teachers and administrators ought to remember that their substitute for learning by experience.

Frequently, however, administrators lack the time, money or ability to implement such activities. They often afraid to let students go beyond the classroom playground their hand at the real world.

One practical application classroom principles occurred six years ago at Jordan High School, Salt Lake County. Lowell J. An English and humanities teacher conceived the notion that his students could best develop their talent producing a motion picture.

The project began small but magnified. Eventually, Bobber's scores of students in writing, story adaptation, choreography, art and special business management.

The fruit of the effort was a minute movie with optical—this is the first of its kind to be produced by a high school.

Bobber's wizardry continues off a company bought distribution rights to the film for $10,000. The company's aim was to spread the high school across the nation. The drama went south, however, only two years from release. After he left Jordan, the idea of the distribution company was dropped.

Despite its early demise, it was successful. Under the direction, students in seven classes produced a film in glorious technicolor.

Public schools need a balance of three-R pragmatism and Bion.

Congratulates snuggles

Editor: Congratulations! To the numberless couples huddled in sleeping bags waiting for the England Dan and John P. Murray. You did a fine job of giving me and my non-member who are also waiting in line a double standard at BYU.

It is not to say that I wouldn't allow boys in girls' dorms, but I wouldn't allow boys to tell of girls' dorms will tell of flaunting of low morals will evidence that the time count than 36 couples snuggled to sleeping bags. I frankly do think these were married couples. Utah spring skiing as popular as ever

By STEVE COX
Universe Staff Writer

Take one clear, sunny day, more than 100 inches of snow covering a verticle drop, a pair of skis, boots and poles and add oddly warm temperatures which range from 45 to 70 degrees, and you have something spectacular: spring skiing.

Spring skiing has already proven to be more popular this year than in past years because of the above average snow conditions at all Utah ski resorts.

It is not unusual to take the early morning lift up the mountain and hear the exhilarating yells and screams from skiers as they bomb down the mountain full of enthusiasm and energy.

To the advanced, full time skier, there is nothing that compares to the deep powder slopes found during the winter months, but Owen Boyer, senior in business management, believes "the snow conditions associated with spring skiing are just as much fun to ski as the most ideal snow conditions found any other time of the year."

Actor Robert Redford, agreed saying, "The longer days, warmer weather and great snow conditions, especially this year, create an atmosphere which brings people together in a warm way, and for that reason I really love spring skiing."

"Although I find it tough to get out here often," Redford added, "any free time I do have, I'm here."

When asked how long the Sundance resort will remain open this year with the above average snow conditions, Redford replied, "Sundance is a resort that remains open all year round. Spring skiing is just one of the many facets associated with the resort."

Rich Davis, a freshman from Huntington Beach, Calif., majoring in business management, said he really couldn't compare the skiing in California with that offered by the Utah resorts. "Sure the snow has a tendency to get slushy, but skiing slush is just as much fun as skiing the deep powder or packed surfaces. It's all skiing."

Kent Warren, ski school director at Sundance, said there are dangers associated with spring skiing. However, accidents aren't as much a problem during the warmer spring weather because people are more relaxed and because warmer weather requires less clothing and freer movement on the mountain.

"One of the dangers that people should be aware of is extreme exposure to the sun. Because of the reflective properties associated with the sun and snow combination, skiers are getting twice the exposure to the sun as they would have if there wasn't snow," Warren said.

Spring skiers should also wear eye protection equipment, either sun glasses or goggles. The sun can cause snow blindness and swelling around the eyes, if exposure comes over long periods of time, Warren said.

Temperatures on the slopes vary from early morning to late afternoon 20-25 degrees, Warren said. To most skiers the variation can be deceiving because the air temperature can be 45 degrees, but because the sun reflects off the snow, the weather seems like 80 degrees, Warren said.

The best time of the day to enjoy spring skiing starts at around 10 a.m., because the snow has a little time to soften up, Warren said. The skier also has plenty of time to enjoy a full day of skiing.

Scott Strong, senior in art design, from Springville, said, "Many people have the idea that spring skiing means muddy parking lots and knee deep slush, but many times throughout the spring, the higher areas at ski resorts will often have just as good snow conditions as those found in January."

Y dance program successful

LINDSTROM 400 at one dance this year.

Mike Whitaker, ASBYU faculty adviser, said the success is due to the current popularity of dancing, the fact that BYU is not a commuter school and the LDS concept of dancing.

"Dancing seems to be reaching a height of popularity right now. This has been our best year ever, attendance-wise. The figures this year are up a couple of hundred students per dance from last year."

Participation at the dances seems to be high whether a live band plays or a disco sound system is used. "They all draw about the same," Whitaker commented.

Most of the bands hired are local groups auditioned by members of the Central Dance Committee of the ASBYU Social Office. "During the summer we try out a lot of new bands — we expect to be using a lot of new groups next year." Disco dances are set up through technical services but the equipment is owned by the Social Office.

"The dances are really successful because students enjoy hearing pop music played by the original artists," Whitaker said.

Another factor contributing to the high turnout, Whitaker believes, is that BYU students are less likely to travel elsewhere for entertainment than students at other universities.

"Most students live on or near campus and they find their entertainment needs met by the university. Schools with a large amount of commuters have to compete more with off-campus entertainment than we do."

Susi Keller, Central Dance Committee chairwoman for the Social Office, offered additional reasons for the success of the program. "At the National Entertainment and Campus Activities Association Convention last month, BYU's dance program was estimated to be the best in the nation," Miss Keller said. "The other 400 schools attending the convention were really proud of the fact that they got 900 students to attend their dances. We had 3,400 at Friday Night Fever," she said.

Many schools at the convention were amazed that BYU could afford to serve free refreshments.

"Our orientation dances are usually the most successful dances of the year, but Friday Night Fever topped them this year," she said. Friday Night Fever was a special dance activity with free movies, refreshments, games and bowling that lasted until 2 a.m., all for the regular admission price.

Miss Keller said the Social Office has received a lot of complaints by students who want to see more conventional dances at BYU. "We had one conventional dance last semester and only 10 couples showed up. We have to gear our dances to what the majority of the students want," she said. "All of the preference dances sold out this year except those that were conventional," she added.

"With only 900 students attending their dances, other schools can't afford to provide free food for students," Miss Keller said. "A lot of schools can't even afford to own their own sound system."

The Social Office is virtually supported by the successful dance program. "The dances are the bread and butter of the Social Office," Whitaker said. "Even though we only charge $1 for admission, the dances provide the main income for the Social Office and make up for losses that occur from concerts."

"BYU dances are inexpensive compared to other schools," Miss Keller said. "Students at other universities have to pay $2.50 to get in because not enough people attend."

2 arraigned on marijuana charge

Two brothers from Provo have been arraigned in Provo City Court and charged with willful distribution of marijuana.

A preliminary hearing for the West felony charge by Provo Judge J. Gordon Knudsen.

According to Provo Police Chief Swen Nielsen, the brothers were arrested March 13. Provo Police and BYU Security joined forces in the operation.

Samuel West, 23, and Marion West, 22, 911 E. 100 North, were advised of their rights and given a copy of the felony charge by Provo Judge J. Gordon Knudsen.

Teachers of culture needed

By SUSAN MAGNUSON
Universe Staff Writer

Area specialists are needed to teach in the Ambassadorship Program at the LTM.

Kelly Crabb, administrative assistant in Research, Development and director of the LTM Ambassadorship Program, said that Program is a "culture program taught to missionaries in helping them to relate better to investigators of different cultures and religions."

The program, according to Crabb, is divided into three areas: culture general, culture specific and culture textbook. In culture general, basic communications skills which apply to all missionaries are taught.

Human relations

In culture specific, small groups of missionaries get together and talk about human relations topics.

In the culture textbook area, topics such as coping with change, perception and values, tolerance and tradition, and communication are taught.

Every week one topic is covered by an area specialist. Then on Sunday night they meet again in their specific area and discuss the topic of that week.

Specialists needed

The Ambassadorship Program needs area specialists to teach culture for Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Thailand, Korea, Indonesia, Samoa, Iran, Navajo, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Yugoslavia, France, Quebec, Tahiti, Italy, Denmark, Norway, Finland, Sweden, Netherlands and Belgium.

Area specialists are also needed for South America, Bolivia, Argentina-Chile, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela, Colombia, Uruguay, Paraguay, Guaraní Indians, Oymara Indians, Quechua Indians, Calchiquel Indians and the Quiche Indians.

Some other areas where specialists are required, according to Crabb, are Spain, Central America, Mexico, U.S. Chicano, Brazil and Portugal.

Crabb said those who are interested in working as volunteers should be able to start spring semester and should plan to stay one year. "Right now many areas have only one person working in them. We'd like two people to work in each area."

Extra names filed

He said after all positions were filled people will still be needed to help prepare lessons and slides. "Names that are not used will be put in a file for later reference," Crabb said.

He said he felt the program was going well. "From all indications, we have received good feedback. However, it is still an underdeveloped program."

He said, "All we really need is more fine people to help us with the program."

"We need people who are dedicated. It's people who are really sensitive to cross-cultural differences that really make the program successful." He added, "By understanding culture, it helps to get the message across. We are doing a lot of good for the missionaries."
